“TEAR DOWN THIS WALL” – June 12, 1987

President Reagan’s speech and his declaration to Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev at the Berlin Wall — “Mr. Gorbachev, tear down this wall!” — was credited with helping to bring an end to the Cold War. The speech, delivered to the people of West Berlin on the occasion of the 750th anniversary of the city of Berlin, was also audible on the East side of the Berlin wall.

Growth and Responsibility – Leitmotif for Germany’s G8 Presidency

On 1 January 2007 Germany assumed the presidency of the eight leading industrialized nations. This is its fifth G8 Presidency. The highlight of the one-year presidency will be the Summit of heads of state and government on 6 - 8 June 2007 at the Baltic Sea resort of Heiligendamm. With the Leitmotif "Growth and Responsibility", Chancellor Merkel is directing the focus of the G8 in 2007 on key global challenges: the world economy as well as Africa’s economic, political, and social development. An important goal in this aspect is to take account of the major shifts in the world economy brought about by the rise of the newly industrialized economies, also within the system of global governance. Asian Pacific American Heritage Month: May 2007

Asian Pacific American Heritage Month honors the achievements of American ethnic groups with roots in Asia and the Pacific Islands and recognizes their contributions to the United States. The U.S. Census Bureau lists more than 25 such groups -- Vietnamese, Chinese, Filipinos, Indian, Pakistani, Korean, Japanese, Cambodian, Laotian, Indonesian, Thai, Burmese, Malaysian, Taiwanese, Sri Lanka, Bangladeshi, and native Hawaiians, Polynesians, New Zealanders and Australians.

In 1978, a joint congressional resolution established Asian/Pacific American Heritage Week. The first 10 days of May were chosen to coincide with two important milestones in Asian/Pacific American history: the arrival in the United States of the first Japanese immigrants (May 7, 1843) and contributions of Chinese workers to the building of the transcontinental railroad, completed on May 10, 1869.

Milestones in Asian American History

- 1587 The Spanish galleon Nuestra Senora de Esperanza (Our Lady of Hope) lands in California, bringing Filipino crewmembers who act as scouts for the landing party.
- 1790 The first U.S. Naturalization Act allows only “free White persons” to become U.S. citizens.
- 1830 The first U.S. Census notation of Chinese in America – the count is three. In 1840, eight; by 1850, the figure is 758. These early Census figures probably did not include other Asians and Pacific Islanders in the United States. Timeline

Korean Americans

The history of Koreans in America began just over a hundred years ago, on January 13, 1903, when the S.S. Gaelic arrived in Honolulu Harbor, carrying the first significant group of Korean immigrants to the New World. Today, Korean American populations exist throughout the United States, with the largest communities residing in Los Angeles, New York, Chicago, and Northern Virginia.

In the aftermath of the massacre at Virginia Tech University on April 16th, as the nation mourned the victims of Cho Seung Hui, a sense of shock and shame overcame the Korean American community.

"The sensitivity of Korean Americans -- and that of other minorities -- is rooted in culture and history, and reflects the reality that distinctive events, with distinctive players, tend to leave a unique mark on our collective psyche, bolstering innate tendencies toward bias and stereotyping. [...] Foundational to Korean thinking is the sense that you need to ... adjust yourself to expectations. It’s very, very important that you protect your family face and reputation, recognize that whatever you do has consequences not just for you, but for others as well." Request article.

Model Minority Stereotype

As many people hold positive views of Asian Americans as hard-working, smart, and relatively successful, Asian Americans have been labeled a "model minority" for their high rates of achievement.

How have Asian Americans been portrayed as a model minority?

Find out more about the background of the "model minority" stereotype. In the 1960s, the U.S. media began to portray the model minority through academic and economic success stories of Japanese and Chinese students. This paper illustrates problems resulting from the artificial grouping of Asian Americans as one ethnic group and the stereotype's influence on young Asian Americans. TEACHING LITERATURE

An Na: A Step from Heaven

An Na's first novel, A Step from Heaven, was the 2002 winner of an award for excellence in literature for young adults. It is the story of a Korean family that immigrates to California in search of a better life. The story is told through the eyes of Young Ju, who is a preschooler when the book begins and a young woman heading off to college by the time it ends. The story begins in Korea. In the airplane flight to the United States, Young Ju equates going to America with going to heaven. Her uncle corrects her by saying that America is "a step from heaven." In fact, life turns out to be much harder in America than the family anticipated. Young Ju, however, adjusts quickly and soon excels in school. But the shame of her family's poverty and her father's worsening alcoholism leads to lies that prevent her from fully embracing her new life. She is caught between two cultures and increasingly isolated by the growing tension within her family.

A play for children based on An Na's A Step from Heaven was adapted by the author for classroom use.

An Interview with An Na

Excerpt:

"Did you feel caught between being Korean and American?
AN NA: That really was a conflict when I was growing up: learning to be independent and speak my mind at school, and then coming home to be a Korean daughter, demure, soft-spoken, obedient. There were definitely battles, especially when I was a teenager. I was different from Young Ju, much more outspoken. I really fought hard. …
A scene in the immigration office shows the child taking control. Did you speak for your family in situations like that?
AN NA: Many times. I think that's a unique experience for children of immigrant parents. The kids become very powerful when they translate… I remember lying to my parents about things I didn't want them to know. …
When you have children, will you keep them in touch with their Korean roots?
AN NA: I hope so. But I know how difficult it is because my parents tried very hard with me. I went to Korean school and refused to learn. It was one of those things: 'I'm in America. I don't need to learn Korean.' …"

About Asian-American Literature

The Cultural Production of Asian American Young Adults in the Novels of Marie G. Lee, An Na, and Doris Jones Yang

Chiu, Monica. The Lion and the Unicorn, April 2006, v30, # 2, p168

Can one challenge stereotypes without first alluding to them? In the U.S., Asian American youth must often distance themselves much more from their families and culture than those from other ethnic backgrounds. In this essay, the author examines socializing subtexts as portrayed in four young adult novels: "To enter the ongoing conversation about multicultural literature -- what to read and teach, and how to interpret the readings -- is to contribute to a territory fraught with controversy... To swallow the texts uncritically is to participate in socializing Asian American teens into a landscape that, ultimately, may not help them find their voices." The author has particular praise for An Na's A Step from Heaven: "All of the novels emphasize immigrant hardships, but it is in the telling and unfolding of these hardships that allow them to read either as 'becoming American' novels concluding in expected Asian American success or that, like Na's, reference the continued often hidden, pain of immigrant struggles."

World Press Freedom Day – May 3

Every year, May 3rd is a date which celebrates the fundamental principles of press freedom; to evaluate press freedom around the world, to defend the media from attacks on their independence and to pay tribute to journalists who have lost their lives in the exercise of their profession. Press freedom, safety of journalists and impunity will be the topics of UNESCO World Press Freedom Day 2007.

U.S. Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice praised journalists for being on the front lines to report “some of the most difficult conflicts in the world.” (Full Text) And indeed, the world became a more dangerous place for journalists in 2006, with more members of the media killed last year than in any year since 1994, several global press freedom advocacy groups report. In its “Press Freedom Round-up 2006,” released December 31, 2006, Reporters Without Borders -- a Paris-based international nongovernmental organization that advocates for freedom of the press -- said at least 81 journalists were killed in 21 countries while doing their job, the highest annual toll since 1994, when 103 journalists died. Mindy Weisel: Words on a Journey

Jewish American artist Mindy Weisel met with U.S. American and German artists and writers in Berlin. The daughter of Auschwitz survivors, Ms. Weisel was born in a displaced persons camp in Bergen Belsen. She has been able to transform and transcend that legacy of loss into hope and spirituality through art. Weisel discussed her upcoming contribution to the Berlin-and-Beyond project which the Outdoor Arts Foundation has commissioned for the 20th Anniversary of the fall of the Berlin Wall. The discussion focused on the personal and social perspectives that art can provide. Video | MP3

TALKING ABOUT MEDIA

Project for Excellence in Journalism (Pew Research Center)

This annual report documents the health and status of American journalism. This year, the report focuses on the rapid pace of change in the American media landscape. “As audiences migrate to new delivery systems, practicing journalism has become far more difficult and demands new vision. Traditional journalism is not, as some suggest, becoming irrelevant but the press is no longer gatekeeper over what the public knows. Journalism’s new role is only beginning to be understood.” Fulltext: http://www.stateofthenewsmedia.org/2007/index.asp
